TEN SIGNS

it might be time for assisted living.

1. Driving Don't ignore near misses, fender benders, new dents or nicks. Request a ride to assess your loved one's current driving skills.	6. Medications Be on the lookout for empty or expired medicine bottles, unfilled prescriptions or confusion about proper dosage and medication times.
2. Appearance Poor grooming or hygiene, like unwashed or uncombed hair and stained clothing, might mean a little assistance is needed.	7. Maintenance Sloppy housekeeping or a neglected yard may reveal that your loved one isn't faring as well at home alone anymore.
3. Activities Watch for loss of interest in favorite pastimes. Giving up things that were once important may be a red flag.	8. Food Check the fridge and cupboards. Look for food that's old or spoiled—from past-due expiration dates to moldy leftovers and sour milk.
4. Moods Frequent bouts of irritability, moodiness, depression or fatigue are always symptoms worth discussing.	9. Finances When unopened mail, unpaid bills and overdue notices stack up, it may raise concerns about how financial matters are being managed.
5. Mobility To avoid the risk of falls and fractures, watch to see if your loved one is more unsteady when walking, has recently fallen or now has difficulty with stairs.	10. Forgetfulness It's not just a natural part of aging when parents forget important appointments, repeat things constantly or frequently lose their sense of direction.
